where it is the only method of dealing with incorrigible pupils who are in many instances grown men.

In the case of John Ginness, to which you refer, he not only refused obedience to the directions of the school officers, but became violent. He was placed in the guard house three days only and well merited the punishment imposed, as he has been a source of trouble and annoyance since coming to the school.

Respectfully,

(Signed) F. H. Abbott,
Assistant Commissioner.
