Sideline Opens in Kline Center

Dickinson unveiled the new Sideline Sports Stop in the Kline Center Atrium in September. Formerly the Juice Box, the underutilized space was repurposed over the summer. It's geared toward the athlete/fitness enthusiast on the go and offers useful items like phone chargers, earbuds and water bottles, as well as beverages and snacks for pre- and post-workout fueling. As a branch of the Bookstore, it also offers sports- and spirit-themed Dickinson gear.

Showcasing Internships

More than 400 students completed internships and research experiences this summer in 30 states and 21 countries. At organizations from the Department of Transportation to the U.S. Army War College, the Mann Center for the Performing Arts and several research labs, Dickinsonians gained critical firsthand experience and presented what they learned at the annual Internship Showcase.

BE.Hive

On Oct. 5, Dickinson partnered with Rare to host BE.Hive on Campus: Climate Change Needs Behavior Change. The event brought together more than 420 campus sustainability leaders, behavioral scientists and student advocates from 46 colleges—as well as actor/comedian Ravi Patel and representatives from Patagonia, AASHE and others—for an interactive, high-energy summit on how to go beyond sustainability education and create lasting behavioral change.

Activities Abound

The Activities Fair is held at the start of every semester at Dickinson. Students who are involved with more than 120 campus clubs and groups set up displays and connect with interested students. If visitors like what they see and hear, they can sign up to join on the spot.

Women's Leadership Summit

On Sept. 26-27, Dickinson hosted the inaugural Women's Leadership Summit, an opportunity for alumnae, parents, faculty and staff to come together for professional and personal enrichment.

The event was chaired by Annie Hanna Engel '93, president and COO of Howard Hanna Real Estate Services. It featured a fireside chat with President Margee Ensign; a keynote address by Rachel Keen Hutchisson '89, vice president of corporate citizenship & philanthropy for Blackbaud Inc.; a discussion of the challenges of working in the male-dominated sports field by Kirsten Nixa Sabia '92, vice president of integrated communications for the PGA TOUR; and discussions on leadership, civic engagement, salary negotiations, conflict management, bias, women in politics, mentorship and entrepreneurship.

Global Summit

Dickinson hosted representatives from 22 liberal-arts institutions across the nation and around the world for the 2019 Global Engagement in the Liberal Arts Conference on Oct. 4-5. The conference theme was creating inclusive global communities.

"I jumped at the chance to host this conference, because I wanted to share the innovative ways in which Dickinson is working to institutionalize inclusivity with global and intercultural perspectives," says Center for Global Study & Engagement Executive Director Samantha Brandauer '95, "and because I recognize that being a leader in this area means collaborating with our colleagues from around the world who also are grappling with these issues. We have so much to learn from each other."

Scientists Say Cheese

Professor of Psychology Marie Helweg-Larsen is the current director of Dickinson's Norwich Sciences Program at the University of East Anglia in England. Before the start of the semester, she and the five students participating in the program studied the history of science in London and took a break to pose as Victorian scientists.
