

Mr Gardiner, the Commissioner, then said, I will deliver the fugitive over to the Marshall, to be delivered over to the claimant.

Mr. Child suggested if that was the law. The Commissioner then said he would hand him, as the law said to the claimant, and if they should be any danger of rescue he would deliver him to the U. S. Marshall.

The United States Marshall said he had performed his duty in bringing him in.

Mr. Clare said he would demand such aid from the United States Marshall as would secure the delivery of the man to his owner in Baltimore.

Mr. Child suggested that it must be an affidavit that he apprehends a rescue. Mr. C. stated that he did so apprehend.

Mr. Talmadge, the Marshal, said he would have to perform his duty if called upon.

Mr. Child replied he supposed that he would, but there were doubts as to the form.

The necessary papers were made out by the Commissioner, Mr. Clare swearing he feared a rescue, and Hamlet was delivered to him, thence to the U. S. Marshall.
