

several hundred thousand dollars.

GEORGE W. MEEKER.

This gentleman did his duty yesterday, and here is the paper that gives him credit therefor. He saved a human being from the clutches of the kidnappers, whom the law placed entirely in his power. By doing differently, he might have won plaudits from the immense slave-holding aristocracy of the South, and from the corrupt politicians of the North, who, like Peck, would sell it for a mid-shipman.

The poor negro had nothing to give in return, and yet Mr. Meeker gave him that priceless jewel, that inalienable right, his liberty. He met the crisis like a philanthropist, and thousands upon thousands of the oppressed and their friends invoke blessings upon his head.

OH HEAVENS! One of the pimps of the kidnappers is a tract distributor in this city. What church owns him?
